MONDAY EVENING, JULY 12, 1915.

THE GERMAN NOTE.

The German reply to the American protest concerning the seizure of the Lusitania and the loss of a number of American lives is conciliatory in tone but unsatisfactory in substance. It expresses a lively sympathy for the American desire for freedom of the seas, but it asks the American government to subordinate to a new principle of international law involving a contrary policy which we have just rejected.

The substance of the German reply is that the rights of America as neutrals go no further than the American flag. The contention of President Wilson has been for the rights of neutrals as defined and recognized by international law is hitherto established. The American protest has been against the submarine attack upon the Lusitania without first searching the vessel for contraband of war and without affording those aboard an opportunity to escape before destroying the vessel, assuming that her destruction was proper under the recognized rules of war.

This seems to be the point upon which diplomacy strikes. The German note declares that in violation of international law it declines to recognize the right of the United States to search merchant ships for contraband and to arm themselves and rain submarine warfare upon the sea. It is pointed out that the British government has with a last March tried to enforce an embargo on Germany's food supply by taking from merchant ships of all nations all merchandise and from Germany it seems to be only too true that this humane provision of the international law concerning searches and seizures and contraband articles have been ignored by all the belligerents without protest or apology and that as far as they are concerned these portions of the old law are a dead letter among the moderns.

The modest proposal proposed by Germany indicates an earnest desire to accommodate the changed circumstances to the safety of American travel but the proposal is one that a limited number of belligerent vessels may be sent for passenger travel with the assurance that they will be permitted to pass unmolested, but not a single sailing vessel, even, involves acquiescence on the part of the United States in the new and inhuman modification of the international code which justifies the sinking of merchant vessels in a submarine without notice together with the sacrifice of the lives of non-combatants and neutrals. The American government will not permit a continuance in practice of the inhumanity of the new law of war and it is doubtful whether we can alter the current of submarine warfare, the desperate life-and-death struggle of the forces of Europe.

The "is a bit of deal of historical newspaper comment on this matter and there is a disposition on the part of the administration to keep close to the bandwagon. It might be well to remember that we are dealing with a new and untried theory and further that there is no reason to declare war now in the Congress.

THE FLAG DECISION.
The Interstate Commerce Commission has finally ruled on the flag issue in a decision which is a verdict for the "stagers" and for the flag for the railroad. The commission has to reason why the railroads should not make a reasonable charge for hauling flags but refuse to charge the tariff presented because of the "flag" character. The commission's decision that the tariff should be paid but the carriers will receive a refund of 50 cents per ton if they are to be paid for hauling flags is a refund and proposes a charge for "wasting" and says:

The commission accepts the carriers' denial that the flag is worth to them more than it costs. Moreover, their proposed charge of 20 cents per ton for hauling flags seems, through absence of any explanation, to be held to be a fair return for two so-called services of hauling the flag from furnaces and mills. It appears evident, then, that the carriers are expected to haul a flag worth the size that is of no value to them if they are to be paid for hauling flags. It is said as to what arrangement is to be made if the carriers find a constructive use for the flag. It might be suggested, although it is a little bit of a stretch, that the flag be used in a commercial sense as a sign of approval or commendation for a product or service and the carrier is to be paid for hauling it and for the flag with a view to its use and it will have it.

The commission does well to consider how, in the tariff, it suggests may be filed, uncertainty and possibly explain away the evil effects of the Democratic tariff, but they are too recent and too raw to be smoothed over as a little bad luck.

Along with other matters, the question of whether or not a definite commitment and bill of lading should be made in whom title of the flag rests and when and where transfer of such title if any, is effected, should these matters be provided for in appropriate bills, the commission says, they will have due consideration and no doubt be allowed to become operative. Then the commission, developing another point brought out at the hearing and grounds of some against the use of free disposal, even in the interstate commerce, of flag as a means of securing shipments from the steel works. If that practice is permitted to an extent to defeat any requirements of the act the opinion asserts, the carriers will be subject to prosecution for violation of the act to regulate commerce of this, it is believed, would mean action for retribution. However, this practice, while it is easily a possibility, cannot be looked upon even as a remote probability.

The decision affects furnaces and mills in Western Pennsylvania, Eastern Ohio and West Virginia, especially the mills and furnaces of the Pittsburgh and Valley districts, estimated to waste 200,000 carloads of slag annually, which at 20 cents per ton would mean the daily revenue of $1,000,000. If this charge is extended to the other mills and furnaces of the country, which would seem certain to follow, the revenue would be further increased. The only comfort to steel and furnaces found in the situation is the fact that the slag is a valuable material. It is up to the producers to encourage the use of slag for commercial purposes, and to this end it is necessary to invest some money in by-product plants.

A HAWARD OF MERE.
"Deceiving Democrats who have been rewarded with postoffice are being forced to take an unpleasant dose of Democratic medicine in the shape of reduced salaries, which moves the Cincinnati Tribune to remark:

"Given the business of the post-office suffers when industries are hampered and confidence is destroyed. It is just the way of the world. Its lesson experience has taught and will continue to teach. The 'deceiving Democrats' for whom good W. L. Bryan always watched has been more important with this administration than the interests of the country at large."

The Democratic postmaster is receiving the Democratic reward of merit and they have no ground for complaint.

Bill Flinn says he is ready to come back if the Senate Rules is passed. He is a member of the House in the next Republican National Convention. The last one exhibited in Pennsylvania was driven through the Republican State Convention of 1912 with Bill on the drivers seat. However, we welcome Bill back to the Republican fold. The boys are all coming back this year.

The Young river is beginning to look like base fishing.

Non-residents are required to take out a $5 license to go fishing in West Virginia. It is a shame to take the money and then provide no better fishing before it charges so much for a mere chance at it.

The Women's Suffrage movement has pretty nearly put the Women's Christian Temperance Union out of the map, but South Carolina will come to the rescue of the latter this week.

The Connellsville News, in its issue of July 11, is a long and interesting article on the fact that President Wilson's still stands with Judge Van Swearingen in support of the partition of the world into three parts in honor of the three great powers of the world. The article is a long and interesting one and is a good read.

That big gas well near McKeesport, which was said to be the largest in the world, has never been tested for gas.

It is going to be some Republican primary, says the Uniontown News. The Republican nomination is going to be something. The Democratic primary will excite little interest because there is little of interest in it to excite.

If we are not going to have any summer there is no use getting 'het up' over it.

Austria apologizes for a newspaper article reflecting upon President Wilson. If the United States has to apologize for all the American newspaper articles reflecting upon European rulers and governments, will keep the State Department busy.

The carnival may have their good points, but they seem to shelter a lot of bad people.

The Democratic organs are trying to make it appear that there is a great lack of harmony in the Republican party this year. They have the wrong party. The Republican party is united. (The Democratic party) that is disagreeing with itself.

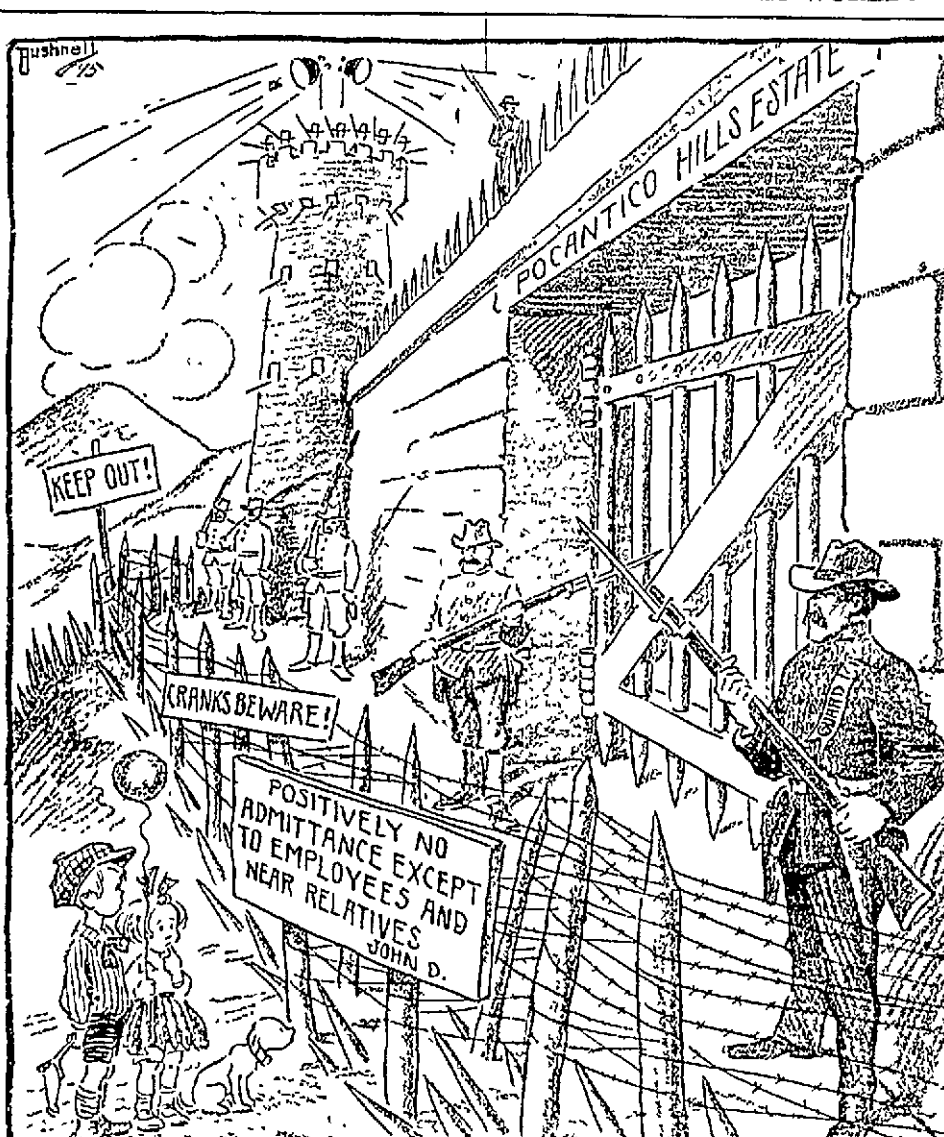

Met. millions and money, the force which will win the war.

Hon. W. L. Bryan's anti-foreign dog law is a case in which the Supreme Court already upon an invitation to show its constitutionality.

The Uniontown News, Freedom Standard, a case in which the Supreme Court already upon an invitation to show its constitutionality.

The Democratic organs are still trying to explain away the evil effects of the Democratic tariff, but they are too recent and too raw to be smoothed over as a little bad luck.

PENNSYLVANIA WOMEN, ATTENTION!

A "Helping Hand" Extended to the Middle Aged Woman.

There comes a time in every woman's life when her organism undergoes an important change. This is a critical period. It is a time when a woman needs her full health and strength. For your own sake you should anticipate this turning point.

Corry, Pa.—"When passing through the experiences of a woman of forty-five, was in very poor health. Some other remedies were used, but with little benefit. If any. A lady recommended Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription because she had used it for several purposes. I began taking it and it helped me at once. It did me over and gave relief. I am very glad to have others know of its very beneficial application to such cases as mine."—Mrs. E. JESSE DAZ, 44 Brook Street, Corry, Pa.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has been recommended for nearly fifty years as a tonic for women who are about to experience "the turn of life." It is helpful in the organization of the circulation of the blood and in regulating the wounded functions. Nervousness and low spirits disappear. Happiness and contentment take their place.

If you are a sufferer, if your daughter, mother, sister need help get Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in liquid or tablet form at any medicine dealer's to-day. Then address Doctor Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and get confidential medical advice without fee. You can also obtain book on Women's Diseases, which is sent free.

Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets help Nature, instead of fighting with her. Sick and nervous headaches, biliousness, constiveness, and all derangements of the liver, stomach, bowels are relieved.

A Public Nuisance

Dust and mud-laden roads are a menace to comfort, to health, to civic progress.

Many of our roads are ankle deep in dust in dry weather and just as deep with sticky mud in wet weather.

The dust is worse than mud.

It hangs in clouds like a pall every time an automobile passes.

Where does it go?

SOME OF IT GOES INTO YOUR LUNGS?

Your wife and children breathe some of it.

It settles down over your yard and flowers—penetrates into the house and covers the curtains, the furniture, the dishes, the carpets and the walls.

You know how disagreeable it is to sit on the front porch and breathe dust-polluted air and have it settle all over your clothes.

But your family gets more of it than you do. Think of them.

This form of annoyance can be stopped at little cost by having oil or asphalt spread over the roads.

Every citizen and every taxpayer with an ounce of pride or love of home and family should be glad and willing to seize the opportunity to put an end to dusty roads.

Scores of touring parties avoid a town because of the bad roads. They spend money and merchants need their patronage. A big sum of money is lost to a community every month that the roads are allowed to stay the way they are.

Why not make these roads dustless at a little additional cost?

Appoint yourself leader in a popular movement to overcome the dust—in your neighborhood at least.

Agitate it among property owners and neighbors.

Other towns and other neighborhoods are doing it. Start a movement in your town and neighborhood for good roads.

DO IT TODAY, YOURSELF.

The Atlantic Refining Company of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh is under contract with the State to oil or resurface with asphalt hundreds of miles of State roads.

A big fleet of auto trucks and wagon distributors, necessary to take care of this work, is operating in every county in the State.

Some part of this work is being done in your vicinity.

This makes it possible to take care of your roads immediately—to deliver material, put it on the streets, in fact take care of the whole job and in the most economic manner.

One of The Atlantic road experts is now at work with your County Engineer. He will be glad to furnish full information regarding cost, amount of work and material required and will assist you in every way possible to secure the kind of roads you should have.

Specially Prepared Silks and Satins That Withstand the Action of Salt Water -- Gay's Bathing Hosiery This Year -- Gray Bathing Suits a Passing Fad of the Moment.

YEAR by year bathing attire increases in picturesque--after the French idea which permits utmost latitude in swimming gear--though as a matter of fact the fashionable Frenchwoman is seldom an accomplished swimmer. She is prone to stand shivering in the brink dabbling her silk-stocking legs in the water and incidentally permitting the throng on the beach full opportunity to admire herself in her coquettish bathing toilette. The Englishwoman on the contrary goes in for swimming as she does all other sports and enjoys to the full her frolic in the waves, but the frill is under taken discreetly in the shelter of her bath-wagon which is wheeled into the water and up it is to be seen steps out of its folds or in the air.

French bathing costumes which included the very elaborate tunic and knee-length trousers that most American women turn up their skirts for a few seasons ago are now worn on American beaches by the same women, and the bathing suit is no longer a thing of the past as it was when it first came into vogue. The excuse for the tunic and trousers is that it is the perfect comfort in the water and though at first these suits were worn poor condition and may possibly last for three seasons if not constantly worn.

Saltwater Fabrics Best.
There are certain silks and satins, carried now by all the large shops, that are especially prepared for sea bathing. The dye will not run out into the water and leave one's costume dingy and greenish or brownish black in tone. The knickers if they do not show beneath the skirt edges may be of black satin or mercerized poplin. They should be carefully shaped, without fullness over the hips and should be attached to a sleeveless waist of the same material. If this waist fits snugly it will not be necessary to wear corsets unless the figure is very heavy and old. Some women prefer the knitted bathing tights which reach from neck to knee and which are slipped on under the bathing dress. But tights are out of favor at the moment and knickers give a much smarter effect. If a correct waist is worn purchase a good bathing vest or unlined corset white and wear this as loose as possible. The more natural the figure lines beneath the clinging bathing dress the more graceful the effect and the corset should be neither high enough to show a harsh line at the bust, nor long enough to appear as a topknot on the hips. One of today's illustrations shows a very clever contrivance--a wide rubber knife which does it that a bathing vest is supposed to do and which is worn over the bathing dress in the manner of an ornamental adjunct to the costume. The pictured girdle is of hyacinth blue rubber and reaches a cup of the same shade. Worn with hyacinth blue silk stockings and the black satin bathing dress these pieces accessories add greatly to the attractiveness of the swimming costume. One may buy also rubber socks, rubber hats trimmed with rubber flowers, rubber bouquets and rubber garters trimmed with roses all in charming shades of rose, blue, green, blue or violet.

Beach Caps Coat the Bathing Suit.
A modern luxury for the sea bath is the beach cape of bright colored silk or--like the pictured cape--of Tery cloth or matching cotton. Such a cape not only keeps off the chill of a keen breeze when one's bathing suit is wet, but also keeps the hot sun from fading the color of said bathing suit and from making sun and peckles on arms and legs. The bathing cape pictured is of pink Tery cloth the cap is of pink taffeta to match--over a rubber diving cap of regulation style--and the combination of pink cape and cap is certainly delightfully pretty. Under the cape is a very trim little suit of blue mohair trimmed with pipings of blue and white striped tulle, a suit that in combination with the alluring pink cape and cap prove the wearer to be both an accomplished swimmer who will not be bothered with sunbells in the water and also a bit of a coquette who wishes to make a very fetching picture of herself out of the water.

Gray Bathing Suits This Year.
Though bright colors will be plentiful on the beaches judging by the array of smart bathing suits in the shop windows, some very exclusive models are shown in gray. A stone gray poplin suit for example has a rudo and cap of violet rubber and a corset bought of tiny tu'hor violets nestles against the front of the bodice. Another gray suit, of p l tinct, has a deep Quaker collar and cuffs of mottled white tulle, and is accompanied by a d'neiro cap of gray rubber with a piped frill hanging down around the face and a bunch of rubber violets for trimming. Illustrated is a sweet little gray mohair bathing dress which is so graceful it should be copied widely, though if one preferred, knickered skirt could be substituted for the full knickers in the picture. Waist and tunic are trimmed with bands of white tulle silk and the tunic has a circular cut which makes it set very smoothly over the hips. As pictured here, waist and tunic are in one piece full bloomers and underwaist in another piece. If there were a full skirt,

The June Bride's Coiffure

A very youthful bride whose coiffure is girlishly low may adopt this veil arrangement.

Very different from the conventional wedding veil arrangement is the pictured veil which is draped at the back of the head, a wisp of tulle being drawn across the face in an Oriental effect which has a mysterious suggestion of its own. This veil was worn by a youthful bride of early June and its rather coquettish draping suited the piquant and youthful extreme youth of its wearer who looked like an adorable big doll dressed in her bridal robes so slim and childish was the little figure under the rich satin and pearls so royal and babyish the face with its soft curves of young girlhood. The bit of tulle over the head and face is separate from the back of the veil and is arranged securely first over a low hairdressing the hair being parted at one side and rolled under at the line of the ears in the now 'bobbed' way. Then the long veil is gathered up at one end turned under to make a puff and sewed firmly. The sewing is covered with a spray of orange blossoms and the puff rises above the head as shown in the picture, when the orange blossoms have been attached just over the roll of hair with several strong hairpins. After the ceremony the separate strip of tulle may be removed since it is merely planned at the back of the head, under the puff of the larger veil. Another veil which floats at the back leaving face and shoulders uncovered is attached to a fillet of lace in rather graceful effect. The hair is arranged very high on the head and this height of coiffure is important with the fillet arrangement of the veil, since the towering coiffure lends the height and stateliness that best set off the bride's features. The strip of real lace which encircles the head is effectively displayed against its wearer's dark hair. Such a lace fillet should not be bound thickly, but laid softly over the hair low on the brow, fluffy locks being drawn out beneath it above eyes and temples. The wreath of orange blossoms may be tucked lightly to the edge of the lace fillet before it is put on the head. At the back, the long tulle veil is doubled over or about a third of its length and attached to the lace fillet at its upper edge, one end of the tulle reaching down to the end of the bride's train, the other falling as far as the waistline.

The most conventional arrangement of the wedding veil is shown in the third picture, and without doubt the average bride will choose this arrangement, for any woman may wear a smart coiffure and fillet at any time, but only once in a life time may woman wear an enveloping bridal veil. Not only is the veil beautifully draped in this instance but the wedding gown with its modest corsage and real lace trimming seems due to conform more satisfactorily to accepted ideals of bridal attire. A real lace handkerchief has been used to trim this veil. The linen center has been carefully ripped out, the real lace border was applied to a square of tulle and this tulle square with its lace border is fastened over the head in cap fashion. From under the edge of the cap, at the back, the folds of tulle which form the long veil emerge, but the back of the cap is entirely hidden by the two enormous choix of tulle which are fastened to the cap above the ears, the filmy folds of tulle meeting at the back. Two sprays of orange blossoms finish the arrangement. The hair is dressed in a soft parting in front and is coiled on the crown of the head to give height.

An ideal arrangement of veil and hair, the bride's head appearing to emerge from a cloud of filmy fabric.

timidly far from the haunts of men, in far-away camps on the mountain peaks, they now desert themselves bravely on public beaches along the sea shore and have become so familiar that they attract very little attention. Some of these suits are of woven silk jersey but in the American version knickers replace the tight little silk trousers of the French costume that used to be one of the delights for tourists at Ostend and other resorts along the French coast.

Only a young woman of flawlessly slender figure can venture upon one of these silk jersey suits. However, the effect on a dumpy or a matronly figure would be fatal--or a figure of heavy build, or of generous curves. The average American woman who yearns for something startling in a bathing suit is more apt to indulge her longing with one of the costumes that are like dressy little frocks with the skirt cut off a style that is bound to be becoming yet cannot in itself open to the suggestion of danger.

Huffled Bathing Dresses Are Coquettish.
One of these pseudo frocks which with very slight alteration might be equally suitable for the street, is pictured in the bathing costume with six ruffles on the skirt. With longer sleeves, a few more ruffles below the knee and a bit of smart neckwear this frock of blue and black satin would be quite appropriate for any fashionable afternoon affair. As it is in the picture, it is quite appropriate for the bathing beach--particularly, one might add, for the beach since the woman whose figure suggests such a fuzzy costume will not be likely to make an enthusiastic swimmer.

This bathing suit is made of blue and black satin with small black satin buttons and the bodice is fitted over a bathing corset of rubber. Under the pulled skirt are knickers of the blue satin strapped in at the knee and the so knickers are attached to a rather tight-fitting waist which makes a snug foundation for the draped bodice of the bathing dress. The cap is of blue satin with a huge wired Alamo bow of black satin and the necklines of blue all have flesh colored tops. Such a bathing suit can be of itself wet--but not very wet. That is, the less it is kept immersed in salty water and then dried in the blazing sun, the better will be its appearance. Therefore such suits are usually kept high and dry on the sand while the sun bath is taken, then after a quick dip--perhaps no deeper than the shoulders--the bather hurries to her bath-house and the slicken frock is rinsed out as quickly as may be in fresh water. One does not see bathing suits of this aristocratic character swishing from a clothesline outside the bath-house with full benefit of sun and wind--no indeed. The suit is carefully folded up wet as it is and what it reaches home is dried as quickly as possible. The bodice extended over a wooden garment hanger and the skirt straightened out into correct lines. When quite dry the silk is pressed smoothly with a flatiron and the shape out of such costumes but careless drying in the sun, and lack of rinsing before the drying. A black satin bathing suit rinsed well every time it is worn and dried in the shade over a garment hanger that keeps the lines from being pulled all awry, will last through a season in besides the knickers the waist could be attached to this skirt and the circular tunic attached on at the waistline. Then knickers and underwaist could be attached to each other.

Gay Stockings and Filmy Collar.
Conservative in style but evidently far from rather than billows in the black with suit made very dressy by a collar and vest of ermine--and one can imagine just how that ermine girdle will look after a single wetting. But the effect on shore is certainly smart and attractive at any rate and perhaps this particular suit is the kind that never gets wet above the armpits. Green and white striped stockings are very fetching with the black suit, particularly as black satin ribbons, tied to the bathing slippers, are criss crossed over the gay stockings. The belt and cap of striped silk repeat the green and white note and this is a decidedly pretty bathing cap, with a narrow brim that turns up at the back while the front shades the eyes. The skirt has a deep tuck midway of its length a favorite device for breaking the straightness. No in bathing skirts.

"Sure; and he saved me off short; said that any business man borrowing money on a commodation paper knew that it was likely to be called in on the expiration date; that an extension is really a new transaction, which the bank is at liberty to refuse to enter. Oh, he gave it to me cold and clammy, sitting back in his big chair and staring up at me through the smoke of a fat, black cigar while he did it!"

"And then?" prompted Griswold.

"Then I remembered the mother and sister, Kenneth, and did what I would have died rather than do for myself—I boxed him a dog. But I might as well have gone outside and batted my head against the brick wall of the bank."

Griswold forgot his own real, though possibly indirect, obligation to Jasper Griswold.

"That is where you made a mistake; you should have told him to go to—b—l with his money!" was his acid comment. And then: "How near can you come to lifting this note tomorrow, Raymer?"

"Near?" said the word. Possibly I might sweep the counters and gather up twelve or fifteen thousand dollars."

"That will do," said the quietist, shortly. "Make it ten thousand, and I'll contribute the remaining ninety."

Raymer sprang out of his chair as if his padded arms had been suddenly turned into high-voltage electrodes.

"You will say to me that for me, Griswold," he said, with a queer acidity in his voice that made the word-craftsmen, always on the watch for apt similes, think of a choked chicken. But Raymer was swallowing hard and trying to go on. "By Jove—it's the most generous thing I ever heard of—I can't let you do it. I haven't a thing in the world to offer you but the stock, and that may not be worth the paper it is printed on if Jasper Griswold has made up his mind to break me."

"Sit down again and let us thresh it out," said Griswold. "How much of a socialist are you, Raymer?"

The young ironmaster sat down, gasping a little at the sudden wrenching aside of the subject.

"Why, I don't know; enough to want every man to have a square deal, I guess."

"Including the men in your shops?"

"Putting them first," was the prompt correction. "It was my father's policy, and it has been mine. We have never had any labor troubles."

"You pay fair wages?"

"We do better than that. A year ago I introduced a modified plan of profit sharing."

Griswold's eyes were lighting up with altruistic fire.

"Once in a while, Raymer, a thing happens so fortuitously as to fairly compel a belief in the higher powers that our fathers included in the word 'Providence,'" he said, almost solemnly. "You have described exactly an industrial situation which seems to me to offer a solution of the whole vexed question of master and man, and to be a seed-sowing which is bound to be followed by an abundant and most humanizing harvest. Ever since I began to study, even in a haphazard way, the social system under which we sweat and groan, I've wanted to be on a job like yours. I still want it. Will you take me as a silent partner, Raymer? I'm not making it a condition, mind you; come here any time after ten o'clock tomorrow, and you'll find the money waiting for you. But I do hope you won't turn me down."

Raymer was gripping the arms of his chair again, but this time they were not unpleasantly electrified.

"If I had only myself to consider, I shouldn't keep you waiting a second," he returned, heartily. "But it may take a little time to persuade my mother and sister. If they could only know you—why can't you come out to dinner with me tonight?"

"For the only reason that would make me refuse: I have a previous bidding. But I'll be glad to go some other day. There is no hurry about this business matter; take all the time you need—after you have made Mr. Griswold take his claws out of you."

Raymer had just the borrowed pipe again and was pulling at it reflectively. "About this partnership; what would be your portion?" he asked.

"The simplest way is always the best. Increase your capital stock and let me in for as much as my ninety thousand dollars will buy," said the easily satisfied investor. "We'll let it go at that until you've had time to think it over, and talk it over with your mother and sister."

The iron founder got up and reached for his hat.

"You are certainly the friend in need, Griswold, if ever there was one," he said, gripping the hand of leave-taking as if he would crack the bones in it. "But there is one thing I'm going to ask you, and you mustn't take offense—this ninety thousand; could you afford to lose it—or is it your whole stake in the game?"

Griswold's smile was the ironmaster's assurance that he had not of fended.

"It is practically my entire stake—and I can't very well afford to lose it in the way I have indicated. You may call that a paradox, if you like, but both halves of it are true."

"Then there is one other thing you ought to know, and I'm going to tell it now," Raymer went on. "We do a general foundry and machine business, but a good fifty per cent of our profit comes from the Wahaska and Pineboro railroad repair work, which we have had ever since the road was opened."

Griswold was smiling again. "Why should I know that particularly," he asked.

"Because it is rumored that Jasper Griswold has been quietly absorbing the stock and bonds of the road, and if he means to remove me from the map."

"I see," was the reply. "In that case you'll need a partner even worse than you do now. You can't scare me off that way. Shall I look for you at ten tomorrow?"

"At ten to the minute," said the resolute planner; and he went downstairs to fill of mingled thankfulness and triumph that he mistook Doctor Farnham's horse for his own at the hitching post two doors away, and was about to get into the doctor's buggy before he discovered his mistake.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Bridge of Jehennam.

Griswold took a final look at himself in his dressing case mirror before going to keep his evening appointment at the doctor's downtown office. It was comfortably reassuring. So far as he could determine, there was little in the clean shaven, square-shouldered, correctly-karmented young fellow who faced him in the mirror to suggest either the bearded outcast of New Orleans or the unkempt and toll-headed roustabout of the Belle Jolie. It only she had not made him speak to her. He had a sharp conviction that the greatest of all the hazards lay in the chance that she might remain her his wife.

He found the cheery little doctor waiting for him when he had walked the few squares to the Main street office.

"I was beginning to be afraid you were going to be fashionably late," said the potential host; and then, with a humorous glance for the correct karmenting, "Regatta, huh? Haven't Miss Griswold told you that Wahaska is still hopelessly unable to live up to the dress code and standing collar? I'm sure she must have. But never mind; elumb into the buggy and we'll let Dr. Bucephalus take us around to see if the neighbors have brought in anything good to eat."

The drive was a short one. Brown was once more shadowing the house in which, first or last, he expected to trap his amateur Macfieath; and when the buggy was halted at the carriage step he was near enough to mark and recognize the doctor's companion.

"Not this time," he muttered sourly, when the two had passed together up the gravel path and the host was sitting his latchkey to the front door. "It's only the sick man that writes books. I wonder what sort of a book he thinks he's going to write in this forgotten, turkey-traden, come-along village of the Rouben yags?"

Griswold, waiting on the porch while Doctor Farnham fitted his key, had a nerve-rattling shiver of apprehension when the latch yielded with a click and he found himself under the hall lantern formally shaking hands with the stately young woman of the many imaginations.

"You are very welcome to Home Nook, Mr. Griswold; we have been hearing about you for many weeks," she was saying, when he had rolled quipped the firm hand and was hanging his coat and hat on the hall rack. And then, with a half-bemused laugh: "I am afraid we are dreadful gossip; all Wahaska has been talking about you, you know, and wondering how it came to acquire you."

"It hasn't acquired anything very valuable," was the guest's modest disclaimer, his readiness arising out of a grateful ending of strains now that the actual face-to-face ordeal had safely passed its introductory stage. "And you mustn't say a word against your charming little city, Miss Farnham," he went on. "It is the friendliest, most hospitable—"

"The doctor's daughter was interrupted with an enthusiastic show of applause."

"Come out to dinner, both of you," she urged; and then to Griswold: "I want you to say all those nice things to Aunt Fanny."

In the progress of the cozy, home-like dining-room Griswold found the contrast between the Farnham home and the ornate mansion three streets away on the lake front strikingly apparent; as eloquently marked as that between Margaret Griswold and the sweetly serene and conventional young person who was introducing him to her aunt across the small oval dining table.

So far, all was going well. But a little later, in the midst of a half uttered direction to the serving maid, Miss Farnham stopped abruptly, and Griswold could feel her gaze, wide eyed and half-terrible, seemingly fixed upon him.

It was all over in the turning of a leaf; there had been no break in the doctor's genial railway, and the broad, less little pause at the other end of the table was only momentary. When the dinner was over the doctor, in the act of filling two long-stemmed pipes for his guest and himself, was called away professionally. Miss Gilman, least obtrusive of chaperons, had been peace fully napping for a good half-hour in her low rocker under the reading lamp, and the pictures in a thick quarto of Gulf Coast views had pleasantly filled the interval for the two who were awake, when Griswold finally assured himself that the danger of recognition was a danger past. As a mental alibi, he knew that the opening of each fresh door in the house of pleasant familiarity was automatically closing other doors opening upon the past; and it came to him with a little dash of the doctor's exaltation, that once again his prophetic words were finding their exact fulfillment. In a spirit of artistic daring he yielded to a sudden impulse, as one crossing the simplest of bridges may run and leap to prove that his theory of safety stresses is a sufficient guaranty of his own sanity.

"You were speaking of first impressions of places," he said, while they were still turning the leaves of the picture book. "Are you a believer in the absolute correctness of first impressions?"

"I don't know," was the thoughtful reply; but its afterword was more definite.

"I thought I might be mistaken, but this time—"

Griswold was laughing silently and inwardly deriding his gifts when, under cover of the doctor's return, he made decent acknowledgments for benefits bestowed and took his departure. He was alone in the upper bedroom, he was congratulating himself upon the new quite complete fulfillment of the wishing prophecy. Miss Farnham was going to prove to be all that the most critical marker of studies from life could ask in a model; a supremely perfect original for the character of Fidelity in the book. Moreover, she would be his touchstone for the truths and verities; even as Margaret Griswold might, if she were forgiving enough to let bygones be bygones, hold the mirror up to nature and the pure humanities. Moreover, again, whatever slight danger there might have been in a possibility of recognition was a danger outlived. If the first meeting had not stirred the sleeping memories in Miss Farnham, subsequent ones would surely only widen the gulf between forgetfulness and recollection by just such distances as the Wahaska Griswold should traverse in leaving behind him the deckhand of the Belle Jolie.

How much this might have been modified if he had known that the man whose face Miss Farnham had seen at the window was silently tracking him through the trophal shadows of a matter for conjecture. Also, it is to be presumed that much, if not all, of the complacency would have vanished if he could have seen an unseen listener in the Farnham sitting-room, dating from the time when little Miss Gilman pattered off to bed, leaving the father and daughter sitting together under the reading lamp.

At first their talk was entirely of the window apparition, the daughter insisting upon its reality, and the father trying to push it over into the limbo of things imagined. Driven finally to give all the reasons for her belief in the realities, Charlotte related the incident of the afternoon.

By this time the good Doctor Bertha had become the indignant Doctor Bertha.

"We can't have that at all!" he said inclusively. "You did your whole duty in that bank matter, and it was a good deal more than most young women would have done. I'm not going to have you persecuted and harassed—not one minute! Where is this fellow stopping?"

The daughter shook her head. "I don't know. He gave me his card, but it is in the New Orleans address only."

"Give it to me and I'll look him up tomorrow."

The card changed hands, and for a few minutes neither of them spoke. Then the daughter began again.

"I've had another shock this evening, too," she said, speaking this time in low tones and with eyes downcast. "This Mr. Griswold—did I understand you to say that he had lost all of his money?"

"Yes; practically all of it," said the father, without losing his hold upon what a certain great London physician was saying through the columns of the English medical journal.

But afterward, long after Charlotte had gone up to her room, he remembered, with a curious little start of half-awakened puzzlement, that some one, no longer ago than yesterday, had told him that young Griswold was rich—or if not rich, at least "well fixed."

"Don't be afraid," he began, and he had come thus far on the road to open a confession when he saw that she was not looking at him; she was looking past him toward one of the windows giving upon the porch. "What is it?" he demanded, turning to look with her.

"It was a man—he was looking in at the window!" she returned in low tones. "I thought I saw him once before; but this time I am certain!"

Griswold sprang from his chair, and a moment later was letting himself out noiselessly through the hall door.

There was nothing stirring on the porch. He was still groping among the bushes, and Miss Farnham had come to the front door, when the doctor's buggy appeared under the street lights and was halted at the house hitching post.

"Hello, Mr. Griswold; is that you?" called the cheery one, when he saw a bareheaded man beating the covers in his front yard.

Griswold met his hat at the gate and walked up the path with him.

"Miss Charlotte thought she saw someone at one of the front windows," he explained; and a moment afterward the daughter was telling it for herself.

"I saw him twice," she insisted; "once while we were at dinner, and again just now. The first time I thought I might be mistaken, but this time—"

"I've had another shock this evening, too," she said, speaking this time in low tones and with eyes downcast. "This Mr. Griswold—did I understand you to say that he had lost all of his money?"

"Yes; practically all of it," said the father, without losing his hold upon what a certain great London physician was saying through the columns of the English medical journal.

But afterward, long after Charlotte had gone up to her room, he remembered, with a curious little start of half-awakened puzzlement, that some one, no longer ago than yesterday, had told him that young Griswold was rich—or if not rich, at least "well fixed."

"Don't be afraid," he began, and he had come thus far on the road to open a confession when he saw that she was not looking at him; she was looking past him toward one of the windows giving upon the porch. "What is it?" he demanded, turning to look with her.

"It was a man—he was looking in at the window!" she returned in low tones. "I thought I saw him once before; but this time I am certain!"

Griswold sprang from his chair, and a moment later was letting himself out noiselessly through the hall door.

There was nothing stirring on the porch. He was still groping among the bushes, and Miss Farnham had come to the front door, when the doctor's buggy appeared under the street lights and was halted at the house hitching post.

"Hello, Mr. Griswold; is that you?" called the cheery one, when he saw a bareheaded man beating the covers in his front yard.

Griswold met his hat at the gate and walked up the path with him.

"Miss Charlotte thought she saw someone at one of the front windows," he explained; and a moment afterward the daughter was telling it for herself.

"I saw him twice," she insisted; "once while we were at dinner, and again just now. The first time I thought I might be mistaken, but this time—"

Griswold was laughing silently and inwardly deriding his gifts when, under cover of the doctor's return, he made decent acknowledgments for benefits bestowed and took his departure. He was alone in the upper bedroom, he was congratulating himself upon the new quite complete fulfillment of the wishing prophecy. Miss Farnham was going to prove to be all that the most critical marker of studies from life could ask in a model; a supremely perfect original for the character of Fidelity in the book. Moreover, she would be his touchstone for the truths and verities; even as Margaret Griswold might, if she were forgiving enough to let bygones be bygones, hold the mirror up to nature and the pure humanities. Moreover, again, whatever slight danger there might have been in a possibility of recognition was a danger outlived. If the first meeting had not stirred the sleeping memories in Miss Farnham, subsequent ones would surely only widen the gulf between forgetfulness and recollection by just such distances as the Wahaska Griswold should traverse in leaving behind him the deckhand of the Belle Jolie.

How much this might have been modified if he had known that the man whose face Miss Farnham had seen at the window was silently tracking him through the trophal shadows of a matter for conjecture. Also, it is to be presumed that much, if not all, of the complacency would have vanished if he could have seen an unseen listener in the Farnham sitting-room, dating from the time when little Miss Gilman pattered off to bed, leaving the father and daughter sitting together under the reading lamp.

At first their talk was entirely of the window apparition, the daughter insisting upon its reality, and the father trying to push it over into the limbo of things imagined. Driven finally to give all the reasons for her belief in the realities, Charlotte related the incident of the afternoon.

By this time the good Doctor Bertha had become the indignant Doctor Bertha.

"We can't have that at all!" he said inclusively. "You did your whole duty in that bank matter, and it was a good deal more than most young women would have done. I'm not going to have you persecuted and harassed—not one minute! Where is this fellow stopping?"

The daughter shook her head. "I don't know. He gave me his card, but it is in the New Orleans address only."

"Give it to me and I'll look him up tomorrow."

The card changed hands, and for a few minutes neither of them spoke. Then the daughter began again.

"I've had another shock this evening, too," she said, speaking this time in low tones and with eyes downcast. "This Mr. Griswold—did I understand you to say that he had lost all of his money?"

"Yes; practically all of it," said the father, without losing his hold upon what a certain great London physician was saying through the columns of the English medical journal.

But afterward, long after Charlotte had gone up to her room, he remembered, with a curious little start of half-awakened puzzlement, that some one, no longer ago than yesterday, had told him that young Griswold was rich—or if not rich, at least "well fixed."

THINGS ALL OUGHT TO KNOW

As Christian Bible Students—The Saturday Proof of "Why God Permits Evil"

One of the questions which comes to nearly every thinking mind today is, "Why does God permit evil?" As we look about us in the world we observe that it is filled with sorrow and trouble, sickness and pain and every evil we could enumerate, and we cannot help wondering WHY GOD ALLOWS IT.

We realize that He is almighty and that He could prevent it if He wished. We read in His Word that He is more willing to do

AUTO EXHIBIT TO BE A BIG FEATURE OF FAYETTE FAIR

Fully 50 Different Cars are Expected to be on Display at Dawson.

OTHER DETAILS PROGRESSING

Buildings Ready for Final Coat of Paint; Woman Expert Is Secured to Assist in Judging Entries in the Women's Building; Fine Cattle Sale.

With eighteen of the finest makes of automobiles already entered and the prospect before them of eventually showing thirty-five cars at the Fayette County Fair, the fair association is highly pleased with the prospects confronting it in relation to the proposed Automobile Show for the week of September 11-17. It is possible, judged by the interest displayed by automobile dealers in the forthcoming show, that fifty cars might be placed on exhibition, which will create for the fair a record not yet attained by any agricultural society in the state. Pittsburgh dealers are included among those who have already made entries, and when the county agents have been heard from no doubt fifty cars will be shown. The consequence of his response to the invitation issued to dealers to show their cars, the fair association will at once make arrangements for the proper housing of the automobiles to be exhibited, and every detail necessary in the promotion of the sale of machines will be provided for.

Unsettled weather of the past few weeks has retarded building construction to some considerable extent, but despite that feature the new buildings are ready for the final coat of paint, are being finished in white with green trimmings, and are by far the finest structures erected in Western Pennsylvania for the housing of exhibition livestock.

Every advanced principle known in fair management for the proper showing of stock has been employed in the erection of these buildings, added to which are the precautions taken against the development of any form of disease. Nothing of this kind has ever been attempted by Western Pennsylvania fairs, and that the features are apparently appreciated by owners of valuable herds of cattle, horses, sheep and other forms of livestock, is shown by advance entries now being made. Despite the ravages of the foot-and-mouth disease of the last ten months, the Fayette County Fair will have its quota of highly bred livestock far in excess of other organizations of the kind in this section of the state. The building of the fair to the public with the majority of stock that will be shown at the West Virginia State Fair and Exhibition of Wheeling the week before.

The task of instructing the various judges and committees in the exacting work of placing the awards on exhibits in the Women's Building has been provided for in the selection of Mrs. L. M. Vowell of Washington, Pa., for that purpose. Domestic science and kindred departments of the Washington fair under Mrs. Vowell's supervision have shown to be the feature exhibits of that organization, and her long service at various fairs and places has given her a grasp on affairs in this connection that places her far above any other woman factor that can be secured from the standpoint of competence.

Another Washington judge has been secured in J. H. Eraser, a noted poultry breeder and exhibitor of high standing among Eastern breeders. At an exhibitor his stock has won at Madison Square, Pittsburgh, Boston, Chicago, Indianapolis and other big shows, and because of his wide knowledge of the requirements of the standard of perfection his services as an all-around judge has been highly appreciated to practical breeders. He is a highly competent official whose awards will be made absolutely according to merit and merit alone.

If the fair association is able to secure Charles Chubb of Taylor, Pa., to act as judge of the Grange horticulture and kindred exhibits, it will have, with those already engaged, lined up the most competent set of judges obtainable. With judges of the standing of those already engaged, the public which will exhibit materials at this fair, need have no fear but what merit will rule the decision of the officials.

Defeated at New Castle by First B. & O. Team "Chips."

The Baltimore & Ohio club was defeated at New Castle on Saturday by a score of 6 to 3. New Castle scored two in the first on three hits, one a two banger, which was a misjudged fly. Three more were scored in the fourth on three hits, a base on balls and an error. However was relieved at the end of the fourth and Reiter, who succeeded him, pitched great ball, blowing no hits and nobody reached third and only one reaching second. Connellsville had the bases full in theseventh with none out but failed to score. New Castle will play a return game within the next two weeks.
